REPRESENTATION.

There are at present several matters intimately affecting the people of Great Britain, anyone of which under ordinary circumstances would wholly engross public attention. Under the rule of the peace at any price party foreign policy is so far as it concerns merely our national honor has ceased to a great extent to arouse national enthusiasm, but until quite recently the Egyptian policy of Mr. Gladstone's government has been looked upon as the question which would constitute the ground of appeal to the people, by the dissolution of the present parliament. This question happening very seriously to touch the commercial interests of the English people, who were spoken of so contemptuously by Napoleon as a nation of shopkeepers, until he was taught to his sorrow what could be accomplished by the shopkeeping people on the field of battle, prepared the way for something of the old English sentiment to burst forth, on the apparent intention to shamefully abandon Col. Gordon to his fate. The fiendish outrages of the dynamites, perpetrated in the most crowded centres of the country could not fail to occupy the public mind, whilst added to these and other somewhat minor subjects of interest, come what at one time would have been entirely absorbing topics, the present epidemic of small-pox in the metropolis, and the approach of the far more terrible scourge of cholera. It must be then something of most vital moment to the nation which can allow the subjects indicated to pass at any rate temporarily into something very like oblivion, but all wonder ceases when we learn that it is what is regarded by the English people as an attempt to interfere with constitutional privilege that has made interest in every other question disappear. The action of the House of Lords in opposing themselves deliberately to the will of the people expressed by their representatives in the House in Commons, is by no means unconstitutional in form, and furthermore the Lords may plead that so far from wishing to oppose the will of the people they are using the only constitutional means of allowing the people to declare by new elections whether the Franchise Bill does actually embody the national will as at present existing or not. Under these circumstances it may seem strange that a people so little given to losing their heads should be so much excited, but the truth is that just as you may always find some one subject upon which a generally tolerant individual becomes rabid and violent, so it is with nations. The Franchise, or representation of every free and sane man in an English speaking country is what the people must and will have at any cost, nor would the House of Lords dare to oppose the Franchise Bill if sent up to them after a fresh election of representatives by the nation. If the English people become so intensely excited over the mere extension of the franchise, surely no wonder need exist at the people of our territories, so strongly objecting to having our thousands of free and intelligent inhabitants without a single representative in the Dominion Parliament. Surely the Government cannot intend to persist in the undignified and immoral course of refusing us our simple rights in this most important particular, until we are strong enough to force them into doing so. We would advise our people to make the matter of representation the most prominent feature in every movement to obtain redress of grievances, not only because it is of itself the most important one, but because as we have said before, representation in the Dominion Parliament is the only means by which with any certainty a successful hearing, we can hope to proclaim our reasonable demands, and appeal to that spirit of justice, which can not be dead in the Dominion.

TELEGRAPH LOCATION.

An order has been received this week from the Minister of P. W. directing the permanent telegraph station to be built on the part of the town which the inhabitants think will be most convenient, as he "believes that petitioners represent public opinion." There is no question as to the unfitness of all the other sites spoken of, or of the great accommodation to the majority of the public to have it erected in the centre of the town, where the most business is transacted by the citizens. The Minister has clearly declared he has located it according to the wish of the public. Can it be supposed he is unwilling to listen to the "voice of the people" in other matters, or that his colleagues will consign all petitions sent from here to the waste basket? Can it be said he has not taken immediate steps to give the people what they desired, on this the only time he has been asked. Doubts were raised at a public meeting held lately, whether a certain telegram had been forwarded by a former committee, but full assurance may be placed in the statement, that no properly drawn out petition or prayer has ever been forwarded before this one. Can it be supposed a petition will be received, when it consists of a cutting from a newspaper, purporting to be a faithful copy of a certain gentleman's harangue, pasted on a sheet of foolscap? Do some of our politicians suppose the Senate is degenerating into a second class parliamentary society, for we can assure them a first-class one would not entertain such a scrap of paper as they forwarded to the Minister not long ago. When petitions are sent to a legislative assembly to command attention and respect, they must be drawn out in proper form. The Minister of Public Works has shown us his willingness to comply with the reasonable wishes of the public, and as we have all along insisted, we are sure his colleagues will be as ready to enquire into the grievances of the inhabitants if they are forwarded in a correct manner. The committee are to be congratulated on the successful issue of their labors, and are due the thanks of the citizens for the creditable way they have done their duty.

Lieut.-Governor Dewdney stated at the meeting of Council held July 29th, that he had a telegram from Sir John A. Macdonald to the effect that the Minister of the Interior on his return from Europe will take into his serious consideration the questions relating to the half-breeds in the North West Territories.

Dr. J. E. Kennedy, Toronto, has been taken to the hospital with Canadian cholera.

The weather has been anything but favourable this week. Monday a strong wind swept over the town, lifting the roofs off sheds and outbuildings, which were not very securely fixed. On Wednesday the day was cold, that trees and underclothing had to be resorted to. The cold weather still continues, and heavy rain fell yesterday.

The stock raisers, poultry, and bee keepers have a journal in their own interests and we are glad to welcome the advent of the "Canadian Dairyman and Farmer," which will greatly help our dairy industry. It is full of readable and interesting matter, and we can recommend it to the farming community to whom it will be of general interest; the nominal price of 50 cts. a year should make it have a wide circulation, and we would advise our readers to at once send their subscription to 162 St. James Street, Montreal.

TELEGRAPH LOCATION.

The following telegram has been received in answer to the petition forwarded by the inhabitants of Prince Albert, regarding the location of the new Telegraph Office in the most central part of the town.

"Mr. W. R. GLENN, Minister."

Prince Albert.

The Minister of Public Works believing that petitioners represent public opinion, has directed District Surveyor-General to build station on lot 77, instead of lot 81.

East End may be used as an accommodation for repeating station if desired, without salary of commission.

Signed N. F. GLENN, Minister."

Lot 77 is adjacent to Mr. O. E. Hughes' villa, and the new "Time" office, and will be very conveniently situated for the general public. The Post Office, which at present is situated in a most unnecessary and inconvenient part of the town, might be contiguous to, or near the new telegraph station, and it is to be trusted the authorities will see their way to remove it.
